Thank you for replying me back.

As right now, I am using unclassified email to make things easier to communicate each other. I sent an email to [redacted] to asked her, what kind of information that she is seeking from me. She replied, the only kind of information they would like to use my title and where I work. If I can talk in general terms about what kind of work I do, that is great. If not, I can talk about what I enjoy about my job, what advice I have for students who [redacted] b6 -1, -2 may want a job similar to mine, how [redacted] prepared me for my career field. That kind of information is what they write about for [redacted]. They can write it up after they interview me and then I will get the paragraph approved by you. If you don't like it, they will delete whatever you don't approve. Or, if you don't like the above. Then they can just have a photo of me with my job title, where I work, and my major.

Actually, if you'd like to see exactly what they are talking about for the publication.. go to [redacted]

Dear [redacted]

b6 -2

We spoke on the telephone late last year regarding two manuscripts Ms. Lillie Leonardi had written about her life and her years in law enforcement, including her service with the FBI. She has titled these manuscripts "In the Shadow of a Badge" and "My Life in Black and White with a Smidgeon of Blue".

After many years in local law enforcement, Ms. Leonardi served as [redacted]

b6 -1

When we spoke, you recommended that I send to you the portions of the manuscripts that dealt specifically with her FBI experience, together with brief summaries of the two manuscripts to enable you to place these excerpts in context. With that goal in mind, I have attached a document containing synopses of the two manuscripts and a brief biography of Ms. Leonardi. At the same time, I have elected to provide you with the complete chapters of each manuscript in which Ms. Leonardi has described any of her work while employed by the FBI, so that you will have a better sense of how she has woven her FBI experiences into the larger story she has told in these manuscripts.

Please let me know if there is any additional information I may be able to provide to you to assist you in your review and clearance of these manuscripts.

Regards,

The attached manuscript is for possible publication in a special issue of the American Psychologist (a publication of the American Psychological Association), "9/11: Ten Years Later." I was invited to write an article for this issue on the topic, "what role can (or should) psychologists play in national policy/agenda-setting post-9/11?." As you can see, that was too big a challenge and I have offered an article on "Impacts of 9/11 on psychological science within national security agencies."

I would appreciate your office's review of this manuscript for publication.
